The present research can help in regulating the pollination activities in the Jamun crop and can help in both increasing the yields in Jamun crop and honey quality produced by bees. The manuscript writing is good however, the discussion part needs to be improved and the references are need to be added more and formatted according to the format of the journal.	The present study helps to know the pollen and nectar foraging behaviour of Apis and non-Apis bees in prevailing weather parameters. Out of studied pollen and nectar foragers, the relative humidity and wind speed affected the pollen and nectar foragers of T. iridipennis on wild and cultivated varieties of jamun.
